

"Know Your Indiana Law"

By John J. Dillon, Attorney at Law
(This is a public service article explaining in general terms a provision of Indiana law. Individuals who wish to determine the effect of any law upon their private legal affairs should consult a private attorney).

"LAND TITLES-DEEDS"

In very early England land was transferred from one person to another when the owner picked up a twig or a clod of dirt and handed it to the purchaser saying, "I hereby transfer to you and your heirs this land." The seller would then walk off the land as a symbol that he was leaving it forever. This symbolic transfer was even used by some of our ancestors here in America. However, by then it was only a colorful ceremony because both English and American law had long since required that land transfers be in writing. That writing is called a deed.

A deed should not be confused with a contract to sell land. A deed is the actual transfer of land or some interest in land. A land contract is merely an agreement to transfer land at some future date. Indiana law requires that land contracts, as well as deeds, be in writing. However, there are some situations in which the courts will enforce oral contracts. Land contracts are only enforceable according to their terms. It is therefore important that they be read carefully and that everything be put in writing.

A deed is a written instrument made under oath (notarized), and signed by the owner that he is conveying an interest in a certain described piece of land. The interest conveyed may be all of the land described, part of it, a joint ownership interest, a life estate, an easement, a right-of-way, mineral rights, etc.

There are many kinds of deeds. The two most common deeds are warranty deeds and quitclaim deeds. A warranty deed in effect says that the seller owns the property, that he has a right to convey it, and that there are no encumbrances on the property except as stated in the deed or otherwise recorded as of public record. A seller by giving a warranty deed is guaranteeing that he will pay the cost of defending the title if a third person later says that he did not have the right to convey it. Since the person giving the guarantee may be dead, insolvent, or unable to be located if his right to sell the property is later challenged, it is necessary for the buyer to have an attorney to check the seller's title by examining the abstract. In some cases, the attorney may recommend an escrow of all or part of the purchase money or the purchase of title insurance.

A quitclaim deed contains no warranties. It transfers only what interest the person giving the deed, the grantor, had at the time of transfer, if the grantor owned no interest, then no interest is transferred and he is not obligated to defend the title. Quitclaim deeds are used to clear up defects in the chain of title and to eliminate any interest of some remote heir. They are also used to avoid incurring warranty liabilities as with land of little value or with a weak chain of title. While no warranties are given in a quitclaim deed, an action for fraud might be brought if the seller represented that he owned the property in question.
